

Lecture by Dawn Belkin Martinez

Associate Dean for Equity & Inclusion and Clinical Professor at Boston University, School of Social Work

The Liberation Health Model: Clinical Social Work from a Radical Social Work Perspective

While a commitment to antiracist and anti-oppressive practice is a core competency of social work education, many clinical social workers may struggle to explore, discuss, and intervene around the effects of systemic oppression affecting the individuals and families they work with.

This presentation will introduce social workers to the liberation health framework: a social justice-focused method of social work practice that integrates analysis of ideological, social, and political forces with the traditional clinical model.

30 October 15:00 - 16:30 in 018/Minimax

The lecture is part of the international MA Program Social Work as a Human Rights Profession (SWHR) and will be held in English. All university members, including students from all programs, are welcome!

Contact: Mareike Niendorf (niendorf@ash-berlin.eu)
Interim Academic Director of the SWHR MA Program

GEFÖRDERT VOM

Bundesministerium
für Bildung
und Forschung

The lecture is financially supported as part of the Sage SAGE!-Project.